

February 14, 2003

Publicado en Fidel soldado de las ideas (<http://www.fidelcastro.cu>)

“Men do not make history. Subjective factors can accelerate or delay major events, even for relatively long periods, but they are not a decisive factor, nor can they prevent the final outcome. Extremely serious accidents of human or natural origin, a nuclear war, the accelerated destruction of the environment and a relatively abrupt change in the climate can alter all estimates and forecasts made by the most visionary talents of our species. All of these things could still be avoided.”

Referencia al texto original: Speech at the closing session of the 5th Meeting Globalization and Development held in Havana, February 14, 2003

URL de origen: <http://www.fidelcastro.cu/es/node/109100>